Q1/2020 MARKET REPORT

The Long Island City condo market continued its strong run to start the new year, but with the COVID19 pandemic disrupting the market over the last few weeks, there will likely be a slowdown in the market over the coming months. During Q1|2020 the price of units in contract rose 12% year over year, and the total number of units closed rose 6% compared to Q1|2019. This quarter the price per square foot of resale units on the market dropped 8% since last quarter, and 7% year over year. The average price per square foot for units that entered into contract in new developments this quarter was down 3% compared to Q4|2019. We will continue to track the effects of COVID19 on the LIC, Astoria and Flushing markets and report our findings.

In the Astoria condo market, the price of closed units and the price of units in contract each rose 6% quarterly. During Q1|2020 the total number of units in contract rose 13% since last quarter while the total number of units on the market rose 57% since last quarter. The Astoria market is being propelled by the influx of new developments in the market in 2020.

The Flushing condo market is still showing signs of growth as new developments like The Farrington had multiple units enter into contract in 2020. The average price of units in contract rose 15% year over year, while the average price of closed units rose 30% since last quarter. As the price of Flushing condos continues to rise, many investors who are being priced out of Long Island City and Astoria markets will look to capitalize on the value in this market especially as other asset classes become more and more volatile.

It is yet to be seen what the effects of the Covid-19 pandemic will have on the NYC rental market. During this quarter the average net price per square foot fell 6% compared to last quarter to $58, while the average net rent rose 5% year over year. The LIC market saw a drop of 22% in the total volume of units rented while Astoria rental market saw a drop of 32% in the total volume of units rented compared to last quarter. It is still too early to definitively conclude how COVID19 will impact the real estate market at large. As always, we will track movement closely and report our findings.
